The Five Crowns of Okrith series is nearly complete!

I can't believe that The Amethyst Kingdom will be out next month! I'm so excited to share this epic (and steamy!) story with you but also sad to finish this series.

The High Mountain Court was written in the wee hours of 4-6am at my kitchen table before my young kids woke up each day. At the time I was battling with chronic migraines and I didn't have any childcare, or a desk to write at . . . or any sleep! But I had a story in my heart that I HAD to tell and I hoped one day it would find some readers who would love it too.

Thank you, my amazing Mountaineers, for being on this wild journey with me. It has been wonderful traveling through the world of Okrith with you and I can't wait to share with you more adventures in other realms!

If you haven't read the blurb for The Amethyst Kingdom yet, you can read it below:

In the fifth and final novel in the Five Crowns of Okrith romantasy series from bestselling author A.K. Mulford, a young fae warrior is hellbent on winning the Eastern Court crown, but when her fated lover—and hated nemesis—Ersan enters the trials she struggles to balance the competition and the chance at love. The crown is calling her name, but can her head bear the weight when passion sets her heart racing?

Carys Hilgaard has grown tremendously through her years; no longer is she the vapid, prejudicial fae who drowned herself in wine. At least, she wants to believe that's true. Training has kept her balanced and open-minded—traits of a promising ruler. So, when the time comes for the Eastern Court trials to commence, her mind is set on one objective: win the crown and become the people's queen. If she doesn't, it puts the only family she has left —her halfling sister, Morgan, and her niece and two nephews—in danger.

But the gods have different plans. Lord Ersan Almah, her ex-boyfriend and fated mate, has entered the competition, vying for the kingdom himself—and hoping it's enough to cure his heart after losing Carys. To make matters worse, Adisa Monroe, a devious witch, searches for mind-controlling amethyst seeds and plans to attack the Eastern Court on the night of the full moon, jeopardizing the entire kingdom of Okrith.

When incandescent hearts rekindle for a second chance at destined love, Carys must learn to let her lingering past go in order to protect her kingdom, the people she cares for, and fight for hope...if not, everything could collapse into ashes.
